

AFPA BULLETIN:

Free Access to the Australian Police Journal

17 February 2010

PROFESSION EMPLOYMENT WELFARE LIFE

The AFPA wishes to remind our members that you now have free access to the Australian Police Journal as a result of your Association membership.

Articles in the APJ are written by police all around the world (both serving and retired), unsworn employees, public safety officials, academics or anyone with a legitimate interest in law enforcement matters. AFPA members are encouraged to contribute articles to the APJ, and can be provided with editorial assistance to assist in readying an article for publication.

APJ articles cover a range of issues in policing and law enforcement. In the past, high-quality coverage provided by the APJ has included:

- the important role played by police during natural disasters
- information on organisations that work to advance the profession of policing
- stories on serious crime, including gang warfare and drug busts
- police-related policy issues, such as ideas on how to improve safety

An electronic version of this popular publication will be made available to members via the Members Zone of the AFPA website.

If you wish to have a hardcopy of the APJ mailed to you please email your request to the AFPA at afpa.office@afpa.org.au. We have received a number of positive replies over the last weeks and encourage all members to take advantage of this unique offer. However, please have your requests to us in writing before CoB Friday 19 February to ensure that you do not miss out.

It is also important that those members who privately subscribe to the APJ remember to cancel their subscription. Subscriptions can be cancelled by emailing the distributor at apj@apjl.com.au. You will still have to advise us via email that you wish to receive a hard copy of the APJ, compliments of the AFPA.

We trust that you will enjoy this new addition to the AFPA's extensive range of benefits and services and welcome suggestions as to how we might improve your membership into the future.

If you have any comments on this bulletin or any other queries please contact your local representatives or the AFPA National Office on afpa.office@afpa.org.au.
