AFPA SUPPORTS MEMBERS INVOLVED IN RECENT OPERATIONAL ACTIVITY

The Australian Federal Police Association (AFPA) publicly supports the Australian Federal Police officers involved in the recent search warrants involving media agencies.

AFPA President Angela Smith said she is proud of the way the members have executed the search warrants and the professionalism they have displayed while under intense media attention.

“The AFP members involved have been professional in the execution of their duties. The community needs to remember that the officers are doing their job and they are doing it professionally.

“Given the media attention directed at the officers, including the disclosure of the name of the search warrant holder by an ABC employee, they have performed extremely well and conducted themselves with integrity and professionalism and I congratulate them on that.

“The AFPA’s focus in relation to these search warrants is to provide welfare support to the members involved. The doors of the AFPA will always be open to these members, and any member for that matter, if they require welfare assistance.” AFPA President Angela Smith said.
